Federal government regulations will drive up Kentucky's electricity costs his spring, the Environmental Protection Agency introduced stringent regulations targeting coal and natural gas-powered electricity generation, promising substantial reductions in greenhouse gas emissions. However, the costs associated with these regulations have sparked significant concern.

If you recall, in last month's column, I addressed the concern about the effects of inflation on the price of electric infrastructure components-a cost that members ultimately shoulder. The regulations mandate on electric generating plants create the same concern, as advanced carbon capture and storage technology is still under development and not commercially available for large-scale use.

Considering this, the estimated cost to retrofit a coal plant in Kentucky is about $10.7 billion, which could potentially double electricity rates not only for Owen Electric members, but for over one million fellow Kentuckians and numerous businesses. Given the existing financial strains on households and businesses, this prospect poses an additional severe financial burden.

While the recent political focus has shifted to regulating emissions from power plants, it's important to note that CO2 emissions from power generation have been on a decline for over a decade in the U.S. and Kentucky. While our power supplier, East Kentucky Power Cooperative, is committed to reducing its carbon footprint and incorporating more renewable energy sources in a balanced and cost-effective manner, the new EPA regulations demand more rapid and extreme measures, risking significant rate increases and potential power shortages.

Electric cooperatives across the United States, including EKPC, are challenging these regulations in court, arguing that they could lead to unaffordable electricity rates and reliability issues. While renewable energy sources like solar and wind are growing, they are not always available when demand is highest, highlighting the ongoing need for reliable and more affordable energy sources.

Owen Electric remains committed to taking a reasonable approach of striving to maintain dependable electric service at an affordable cost, while fighting against regulations that could make energy less available and unaffordable for many of our members.

Capital Credit Refund All Options Satisfy Owen's Policy Criteria

RUS approval is already given for distribution borrowers declaring or paying patronage capital retirements (05/30/96 - letter from USDA) if the following are met:

After the distribution, the borrower's equity is equal to/or greater than 30% of its total assets (A)

The borrower is current on all payments due on all notes secured under the mortgage

The borrower is not in default under its loan documents

After the distribution, the borrower's current and accrued assets will not be less than its current and accrued liabilities (C)

Equity plan - Policy 319

Provide adequate working capital and cash reserves (C)

To provide adequate funds for debt retirement

To provide adequate funds to maintain all facilities at the higher level consistent with sound economic practices

To provide adequate funds for addition to plant

To provide adequate funds for a meaningful capital credits retirement program

To meet all financial requirements while maintaining rates competitive with adjacent energy suppliers

The Cooperative will attempt to rotate capital credits on an annual basis, while maintaining a 'distribution' equity level of 20-35% (B

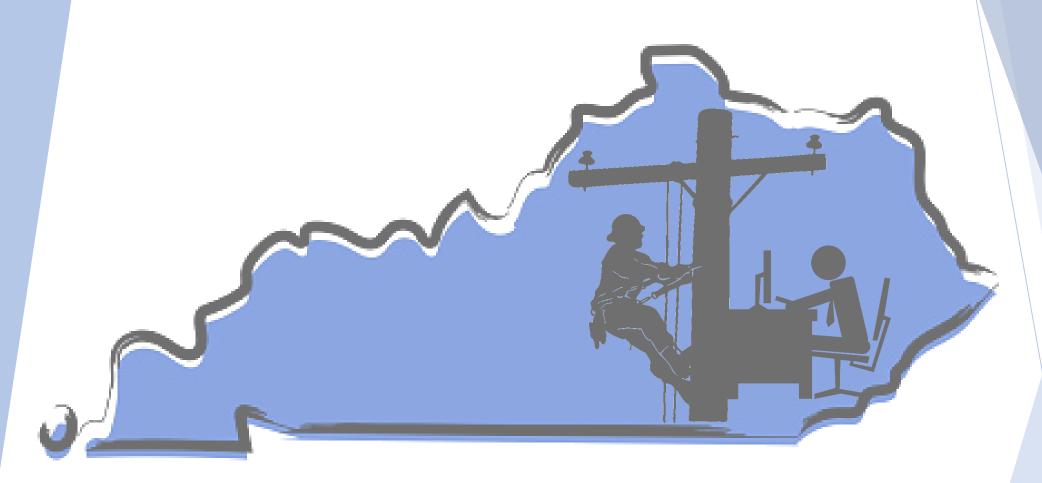

Note: Refunding Capital Credits affects the equity and cash

Per CH Guernsey (cost of service study and rate design) - a healthy rotation for the general refund of capital credits is thirty (30) years. Similar to a home loan of 30 years
